Daffodils

DAFFODILS ARE HARDY

There has been much neglect in the use and general planting of these beautiful spring flowers, no doubt due to the erroneous impression that they are not entirely hardy. This is not the fact, however, as Daffodils are among the hardiest of bulb flowers, fully as hardy as Tulips, and better suited to severe climatic conditions than any other of the bulbous flowers. Strong, robust bulbs are essential in order to get best results, and satisfactory results should not be expected from cheap, undersized and inferior bulbs.

DAFFODILS MULTIPLY RAPIDLY

The so-termed double nose (D. N.) and larger (mother) bulbs will produce two, three and often more flowers the first season, and if left in the ground will multiply rapidly from year to year, producing an increasing number of flowers each season.

DAFFODIL TYPES AND CLASSES

There are innumerable types and classes of Daffodils, which are generally classified according to the size of the trumpet, cup or crown in proportion to the perianth segments, while some kinds derive their classification from their parentage. Under each heading will be found a brief description of the characteristics of the type.

Large Trumpet
Daffodils

Yellow Trumpets

The trumpet is as long, or longer than the perianth segments. Trumpet and segments usually vary from each other in the yellow shades, but does not include white.

Plant in groups of several bulbs, about four inches below the surface to top of bulb, in soil that is well drained. Planting early is quite necessary in order that they make considerable root growth before cold weather comes. A light covering to keep off early freezing is desirable.

HARDY LILY BULBS

All hardy lilies should be planted as early as ripened bulbs are available. Some kinds are not ready for transplanting until late fall when frost has hardened the ground. To overcome this difficulty we suggest covering the space to be planted with some material, hay or leaves, that will prevent the soil from hardening, and planting the bulbs immediately on arrival, covering well so as to allow roots to form before ground freezes.

The bulbs can, however, be potted up when received and then transplanted to the garden in early spring.

EASTER LILIES

There are several types of these lilies grown, and in different localities of our country, but there are three very outstanding and distinct strains that are far superior to any of those formerly imported. These produce larger and firmer flowers, and are practically free from any disease.

These lilies are not hardy enough for outdoor planting in our northern climate but invaluable for indoor culture as they require only the simplest attention, and flowers may be had during a long period by bringing them into the light and a warm room from time to time.

Pot them in any good soil, but be sure that the pot has free drainage, a piece of broken clay pot and a little coarse sand will insure this.

After potting they should be watered thoroughly and put away in a cool, dark room or cellar for a period of six to eight weeks to allow roots to form. The time to bring them into a warmer room is when a number of the roots show through the soil on being tipped out of the pot.

The "Croft" Strain, grown in Oregon. Very large pure white flowers on 18 to 24 inch stems.

Dutch Iris

These splendid bulbous flowers have become exceedingly popular for garden planting in recent years by reason of the greatly reduced price of the bulbs of the better varieties, which allows them to be planted more generally.

The exquisite orchid-like flowers come in blue and yellow shades, also white, and white with tints of yellow and blue, or both.

Contrary to the common impression, that they are not hardy Dutch Iris will be found as hardy as daffodils or tulips. They require early planting along with most kinds of Narcissi, early covering to protect them from severe freezing, and given this, will produce a new and delightful display in the garden.

Plant each variety or color in clusters of six or more, four to five inches deep in any good well drained garden soil, and in a sunny location. Mulch with leaves or marsh hay about the time that severe cold weather sets in.

Dutch Iris may also be successfully grown indoors or forced in the greenhouse.

Superb Hyacinths

GROWING HYACINTHS INDOORS

For planting in soil use any kind of pot that has drainage. Ordinary clay pots are preferable and ordinary soil with a little sand mixed into it makes it more porous. Place a broken piece of crock over the hole in the bottom so as to insure free drainage. Fill in enough soil so that when placing the bulb the top will be about an inch below the level of the top of the pot, fill in soil and cover bulb firmly, leaving plenty of space below rim for watering. Use 4 to 5 inch pots for the larger bulbs when planting them singly. A number of small bulbs planted in wider shallow pots is very satisfactory. After potting, water thoroughly and place in a cool dark place and leave until a number of roots show on the outside of soil when it is tipped out of pot. When several roots show through, it is then safe to bring them into the light where they are to bloom.

When bringing them into the light where they are to grow, better results will be obtained by growing them cool. A window sill or sun-room is best.

OUTDOOR PLANTING

Plant Hyacinths so that top of bulb is about 5 inches under the surface, water thoroughly, and cover with leaves or coarse straw before severe cold weather sets in. Covering for Hyacinths should be quite heavy. Remove covering as early as snow and ice will permit but if already sprouted it is well to replace a little of the covering to keep the direct rays of the sun away, this is to prevent harm from the sudden changes in weather.
